NEW HOUSES

Love has built so many little houses. All up and down the street—Side by side and small, yet strong for holding. What is so new and sweet.

Houses as quaint and creamy and inviting. As carpenters can make. Waiting and empty, spotless and expectant. For little brides to take.

For little brides and eager wives and mothers. With rapt and radiant faces. To plant and prune and drape and hang and polish. Into such lovely places.

Where tired men may come to rest at evening. Beside a fire's glow; Where strong and sweet in stature and in spirit. Small girls and boys may grow.

And soon green rugs of grass will spread before them. Slim vines will reach and cling. And youthful trees will stretch their boughs and rustle. And pointed shrubs will spring.

The little houses, now, at night, are somber. And pale against the gloom. But soon the street will blossom like a garden. And windows burst in bloom. —Anne Blackwell Payne, in the New York Sun and Globe.

Manufacture of Shot Really Quite Simple

All stages in the manufacture of shot are interesting, yet some are quite simple. As explained by Science and Invention, a gas-heated cauldron melts the lead, which then passes through the "shot sleeve." As the molten lead passes through the sleeve it is broken up into small drops or pellets which fall to the water tank 154 feet below.

After being cooled the shot is taken to the dryers by means of conveyors. Then it goes to the polishers and from there passes to a series of revolving drums and screens which assort the shot into the various sizes. Finally, conveyors carry the finished shot to the shipping or storage rooms.

Zero Stones

A zero stone records the distance from that stone to the principal places in its state and in other states. According to the plans of various roads and automobile associations interested in the matter, each state is to have one and only one.

The first such mile stone was erected at Washington, in the lifetime of President Harding, who took a prominent part in its dedication. The second was set up at San Diego, Cal., and the third was at Nashville, Tenn., on state memorial property. It is a gift to the state from the Nashville Automobile club and is of white marble, five feet tall. A good roads program featured the dedication ceremonies in which the governor and other state officials participated.

Apartment to Have Newspaper

At Brookline, Mass., a block of flats will be erected that when finished will be the most luxurious in the world. It is said. The apartments will cost over $5,000,000 an estimate, and will provide for 900 people. The grounds will extend over four blocks and no vehicular traffic will be allowed on these blocks, driveways for pleasure and delivery traffic being provided under ground. Besides a restaurant there will be a doctor and nurses always available night and day and a "local" newspaper will be published on the grounds.

Enough Rats to Go Around

It is estimated that there are 3,000,000 rats in New York city, or a rat to every person. This is in spite of the 26 official trappers and their last year's catch of 22,000 rodents. Unfortunately the professional trappers are paid from an appropriation, and when the fund is exhausted the catchers are laid off. The destruction of property by rats in the city is reckoned second only to that caused by fires.

BRIGHT LIGHTS RID ORCHARD OF MOTHS

Peach Grower Tries an Interesting Experiment.

Swedesboro, N. J.—The candle flame that sings the moth's wings has furnished the idea upon which late Isaac Hurff Weatherby, owner of one of the largest farms and peach orchards in southern New Jersey, has elaborated in his fight against the Oriental moth, newest and most destructive of the pests that have attacked peaches in the East.

Instead of using candles, however, Mr. Weatherby has been more modern. He has had an electric lighting system constructed in his 60-acre peach orchard. At night the orchard is a blaze of light. Around the incandescent light bulbs flutter myriads of moths, and other insects. Their wings are not singed but those attracted closest to the lights become dazzled and fall into large, shallow pans, one of which is set a few inches below each electric globe. These pans are filled with kerosene, which kills all moths and insects that touch it.

Electric lights are in common use among poultry breeders to make the hens get up earlier so that they will scratch more and lay better, but the Weatherby farm boasts of the first electrically lighted orchard in the country. The orchard is set upon a hill, and from a distance it looks like a pleasure park. Thousands of motorists have had their curiosity aroused by the unusual sight.

Peach Grower for Thirty Years.

"I realized last year that I would either have to do something to stop the moths or they would finish me," said Mr. Weatherby, who has been growing peaches for more than thirty years and who declares that the Oriental moth has caused more havoc in his orchards than any other pest, with the possible exception of the borer. The fruit growers now have the borer under control, but they have found no effective means of combating the Oriental moth with the usual poisonous sprays.

"This electric light system was put in early in the summer," continued Mr. Weatherby. "It has cost me a lot of money and I've learned a lot about moths. I have learned that there isn't much use of wasting electric current on moonlight nights. There are few moths in the traps after a full moon. "Even on the dark nights I have found that the moths and other insects are thicker at some hours than at others. When the lights were first put in I made regular inspection trips to the orchards at all hours of the night. Eleven o'clock seems to be the witching hour for the moths. Early in the evening they are not so thick. I have visited the traps at two o'clock in the morning and haven't seen a single insect fluttering around the lights. At eleven o'clock I have found swarms of them."

Mr. Weatherby pointed out the Oriental moth. It is a small, gray moth, scarcely more than twice as big as a fly. The moth lays its eggs at the tips of the young tree shoots. The worm that hatches out bores into the pith of the shoot for an inch or two. After it strikes the tougher bark he crawls to another twig or bores into the green fruit.

Balks at Poison.

This pest seems to have an instinctive repulsion against poison sprays and powders, as horticultural experts have discovered that it spits out the first bite it takes of a twig or skin of a peach and eats only beneath the surface where the poisons that kill most of the other insects do not penetrate.

When Mr. Weatherby first discovered the extent of their damage last summer he tried out a system of oil lanterns and pans in a section of his orchard. These he replaced with the electric lights as more practical this year. Furthermore, he says that he has had "an army as big as Grant's" cutting off the grub-infested twigs wherever they are found, which is very readily done as the end of the twig or shoot begins to wilt as soon as the moth stings it and lays its eggs.

"Oriental moths are apparently everywhere now," explained Mr. Weatherby. "You can find them on the most isolated peach tree as well as in the big orchards. I don't know whether my lights are really exterminating all the moths that they should or whether they are attracting more moths from other parts of the country. Maybe when all of the rest of the fruit growers get to fighting the Oriental moth, or its natural parasite enemies catch up with it, we can at least get the pest under control. Until then nobody can buy my lighting outfit."

Jan. 24 Is Date for Next Total Eclipse of Sun

Washington.—While no total eclipses of the sun are listed for this year, one of the best opportunities for observing a total shutdown of Old Sol's face will be afforded the eastern part of the country early in the coming year, officials at the United States naval observatory here say.

On January 24, 1925, the sun will be in total eclipse. This will start at sunrise just beyond Lake Superior. Its path will be on into New York state and lower New England. Eastern New York and southern New England will be the best positions for observations.

Another total eclipse will take place January 14, 1926. This will start in Africa, crossing the Indian ocean and the island of Sumatra in the Dutch East Indies and the lower islands of the Philippines.

TICKET SALE

Crowd Waiting to Make Reservations for Seats at Minstrel.

To those holding reserved seat tickets for the C. A. C. minstrel show attention is called to the fact that the tickets good for Monday night bear the serial number 74 and those for Tuesday night are number 75. Be careful and use your tickets on the proper night, as seventy-five will not be accepted Monday nor seventy-four on Tuesday.

The chart opened at the Grand this morning at nine o'clock with quite a crowd waiting to get the pick of seats. The ticket sale has been good but there are still some choice seats left for each night. If you desire to attend get your ticket reserved at once.

Need for Discipline.

The price we must pay for continually proving and possessing the good is eternal vigilance. Often a sort of pig-headedness in self-assertion, in self-management, sets up its ownership. That is one reason why discipline—submitting ourselves in some ways to the will of others—is good for us all, big and little, young and old. It is the best and often the only means of breaking down the willfulness that is likely to enter any one of us at any moment.—Youth's Companion.

Two-ninths Departed.

The suburban lady's collie is undoubtedly awe-inspiring and toward cats is most aggressive. During the process of serving the Sunday dinner the maid let Lassie escape from the confines of the kitchen into the yard, and soon a tremendous racket was heard. The family rushed to the rescue. A neighbor was just rescuing her cat from the onslaught. "I wish you would keep that dog home," she said lately. "This is the second time he has killed this poor cat."

Romantic Tale From Land of Midnight Sun

From the frozen tundras of the Arctic region comes a strange tale of love, superhuman endurance and a happy climax. A trooper of the Canadian Mounted police was in love with the daughter of a Hudson Bay factor. Father objected to the marriage. But the girl fell sick. An operation was necessary, for all the medicine in the old man's cabinet was to no avail. The trooper bided his time. He called around every day. "Save my daughter, and you can have her." Those were the words for which he had waited. Though the nearest surgeon was 700 miles away, the trooper started with the girl packed in furs on his sleigh. Half way the girl grew worse. They stopped at a deserted cabin for a rest. There the team of huskies that pulled their sleigh bolted in the night. Food was getting low and the girl still grew worse. There was an infected swelling on her shoulder causing much pain. The trooper operated on it with his service knife and bound up the wound. The last 300 miles he pulled his precious load himself. When he arrived in the settlement where the surgeon lived he fainted from hunger and strain. Three days after he was told the girl was out of danger. Then there was a wedding in the little log hospital, with the oil lamps burning brightly and the snow incusted on the window.

Mother Nature Laughs at Man's Puny Efforts

Man has succeeded almost beyond his expectations in the "conquest of nature," yet news items come in every now and then to remind him how much of the conquering remains to be done. Of countries not yet wholly reclaimed from the wild, India furnishes probably the most conspicuous example. Estimates for the past year show that the jungle is an even more serious issue than the problems of Swaraj. In that in 12 months 3,605 people were killed by wild animals and 20,000 died from snake bite. Sometimes the enemy does not kill, but comes near it by destroying the means of livelihood for whole populations. Recall what happened after the English introduced the rabbit into Australia about the year 1830. The results have been described as "astounding." Not only were grass and the barks of trees consumed; fruit and vegetables were eaten up or destroyed in enormous quantities. Unavailingly, as it seems, the government erected wire fences as a protection, one of them 250 miles long. Today the annual loss caused to Australian productivity by rabbits is estimated at $100,000,000, and the farmers are besieging the federal treasury department for relief.—Exchange.

Dry Enough

Count Pedro Maura y Sereda said at a dinner at the Spanish embassy: "Madrid is on the Manzanares river." The Manzanares probably contains less water than any river in the world, yet no stream has ever been so joked about.

"A German said it was the best river he had ever seen, as it was navigable either by automobile or on foot."

"Ferdinand II used to declare that once, when a visiting prince desired to take a walk along the river bed, it had to be watered first to lay the dust."

Count Romanones said the Manzanares was the best river in the world to dry washing in.

"Once a young woman from Seville grew faint at a bull fight, and they brought her a glass of water, but she waved it aside and murmured:

"Give it to the Manzanares—it needs it more than I."—Buffalo Courier.

Not in Wholesale Business

John D. Cramer, deputy state fire marshal, during a recent tour of inspection over the state, had occasion to stop in several small towns. One of these had only one grocery. Being rather fond of candy, Mr. Cramer entered the ramshackle building and was confronted with a dingy candy case containing all varieties of "jaw-breakers." Seeing some pink and white "dainties," he pointed to them and told the groceryman he would take about a dime's worth.

The old man eyed him over his spectacles. "Well, I can't let you have that many. I've got to keep some in stock for my regular customers," he said.—Indianapolis News.

Hawaiians Like Macaroni

Macaroni is eaten in Hawaii by all peoples. The Japanese like it best, but the Filipinos, the Chinese, the Koreans and the Portuguese like it, too, and it is becoming steadily more popular.

The process of making noodles, vermicelli and macaroni is interesting. They all contain exactly the same thing and are made out of the same dough, says the Detroit News. They get their name from their size. Constituents are simply salt water and wheat flour.

Simple Dress Is Milady's Choice

Prefers Little Frock That Can Be Worn All Day, Yet Look Well.

That simplicity is a difficult achievement is what most women know. The little frock that can be worn all day long and yet look well, the one-piece dress that is equally at home in the office or at lunch at some smart restaurant—this is the type of dress that seems almost impossible to find, notes a fashion writer in the Kansas City Star.

An excellent example of the type of dress that is equal to almost any occasion is one of black satin. It is cut on the becoming coat dress lines and has the new surplice neck, a line that women will welcome joyfully, it is so flattering to most figures.

The surplice collar and the side opening of the dress are cocoa brown crepe de chine. The narrow bands that outline the hem are of the same material. The scarf, without which no self-respecting frock is seen nowadays, has bands of the brown crepe de chine at either end. A small cocoa brown felt hat trimmed with three small flowers, brown stockings and black patent leather pumps complete this costume of a well dressed woman.

Plaid promises to play an important part in the winter's mode. Plaid coat dresses that are open to the waist with a plaited frill of batiste or organdie are exceedingly smart. Another little three-piece costume is of black and white wool cheviot trimmed with red braid and small white buttons. Plaids also appear in silk materials as well as in woolen ones and indeed it bids fair to be a plaid season. Surely nothing could be more attractive for the schoolgirl than the slim little one-piece dress of dark blue with a huge hood-like cape lined with plaid.

Sleeves and Necklines on New Fall Garments

Sleeve styles for fall wear are varied, notes a correspondent in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. There is the long, close-fitting sleeve terminating in a bishop puff with a tight cuff, the gathered lower part often being of a contrasting material. Then there is the long sleeve with the fullness above the elbow, something like the old-time mushroom puff, and the long one which is wide below the elbow. Then, of course, there is the frock with no sleeves at all, but it is usually of an evening or dinner type.

Necklines, too, are a bit different. There are high collars which fasten either at the side or the front, directoire collars with frilled jabots and scarf collars which are adjusted in a variety of ways. Necklines are cut in a V or a square, or are rounded, but the bateau is seldom seen. For evening, the neckline is lower in the back than in the front, the décolletage often extending to the waistline in the back.

The cape wrap is decidedly in vogue for evening. Full or of a three-quarter length, it is developed in both fabric and fur. Street wraps are either straight of line or show a circular flare or a godet inset.

Actually, while styles in general seem not to have changed so very much, there are new features introduced which promise a decided change in a few seasons to come.

New Combs for Bobbed Hair

French combs with fine teeth have been designed for the wayward front-bobbed lock in a variety of shapes, round, square and oval. These may be had plain or encrusted with rhinestones. A practical bobbed barret is made all in a piece in a doubled serpentine curve which grasps the hair securely without catching.

Too Cannibalistic, Perhaps.
"A Russian announces that donkeys are 'good to eat,'" remarks the Carthage Free Press. "When it gets to that point, we know of one person who is going to sign up to observe 'meatless days.'"—Kansas City Times.

COOLIDGE ON BUSINESS

Government Must Be Servant of Public Welfare, He Says.

Washington, Oct. 13.—President Coolidge in an address by radio declared he believed in fair play for big business. He said the supremacy of the government has been the main motive dominating the economic and political development of recent years, adding that it has brought the public interest into the equation of modern industrial and commercial relations. But the government, Mr. Coolidge declared, prefers to let business go its own way, "so long as that is the right way; so long as it is the way of honest and genuine service to the real public interest."

Mr. Coolidge said the government must be the "servant of the public welfare and the creation of an informed and seasoned public opinion." "It can not be dominated by any privilege. It can not be subservient to any private advantage. It must always represent the public. With the hearty sympathy of both business and the people, we have made a long distance toward such a standard. There are encouraging signs of readiness to go farther on the same way. The government will surely be prepared to give all encouragement in such a program. For, by these methods only shall we bring about a proper balance, a secure and lasting adjustment of the supreme individual interest by bringing it into harmony with the highest consideration of the national welfare."

Paymaster Missing.

Cleveland, Oct. 13.—Martin Roth, 28, paymaster of the Haworth Marble company, disappeared shortly after he left the office with $2,175 to pay employees of that company engaged on the new public library. Roth has been an employee of the Haworth company three months and prior to that had been with a large contracting firm for several years. Roth's bride of 11 weeks told police she believes her husband has met with foul play, or was a victim of amnesia.

Why Sunday Is Sunday.

Have you ever wondered why Sunday is so called? It is not because it is generally sunny, but because it was the day on which, in olden times, worship was offered to the sun by our pagan ancestors.

WHERE CUSTOMS ARE STRONGLY DEFENDED

Alsace-Lorraine Stubbornly Opposes Any Changes.

Washington, D. C.—Reports of dissatisfaction in parts of Alsace over the suggested operation of French laws relating to churches, do not raise pro-German or pro-French questions but rather emphasize the outstanding spirit of independence that is possessed by both Alsations and Lorrainers, according to a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society.

"Living in a border land, the people of Alsace and Lorraine have developed an independent spirit not unlike that of the Swiss," says the bulletin. "They are admittedly a mixture of both Gallic and Alemannic stocks. Studies of head measurements have shown this. But their languages set them apart almost like separate little nations. The speech of the great majority of Alsations is a German dialect, but it is almost as meaningless to the ears of a Berliner as is French. In Lorraine a French patois is widely spoken, but it is an alien tongue to the Parisian."

Wanted Own Tongue.

"The independence of the people has showed itself in regard to the language question under both French and German regimes. Before 1871, some more or less desultory efforts at the compulsory teaching of French in the schools of Alsace were combated as were the intensive efforts to force the use of modern German after that date.

"So, too, the Alsation has evidenced his independence by insisting on retaining his own religion, whatever the attitude of his sovereign country of the moment. When France held Alsace and Lorraine before 1871, priests and pastors opposed the teaching of French because of opposition to the French literature of the day. In 1872 the religious leaders found themselves in opposition to the German government over the suppression of religious schools; and today the same people insist to the French just as vigorously on retention of their religious privileges.

"The geographical position of Alsace and Lorraine has largely determined their development and that of their people. They have been cross roads as well as border countries since Roman days. The Rhine, great traffic artery of Europe farther north, has always been a barrier where it skirts Alsace. Until recent years even part-year navigation was impossible along this stretch of the river. South of Strasburg the Rhine had a labyrinth of courses, sprawling over a wide valley, and creating in flood time a broad region of morasses.

"The low, unhealthy, useless valley of the Rhine along Alsace's eastern border, together with the barren nature of the bench-land inland from the river, condemned this eastern strip of Alsace to almost complete desertion. Even today this Rhineland plain is sparsely settled. The thriving cities of Alsace are situated in a zone from ten to twelve miles inland from the Rhine in the parallel valley of the Ill or slightly westward along the Vosges foothills. Even Strasburg is not a true Rhine city. It was built on the Ill where the latter flows two or three miles west of the Rhine, but in recent years the city has grown eastward until it touches the larger stream.

"At Strasburg highways converge from across the Vosges hills, geographical factors which helped to foreground the growth of an important city at this Rhine crossing. Strasburg's name itself tells the story, for it means 'City of Roads.'

Mineral Wealth Important.

"In addition to the plain along the Rhine Alsace includes the eastern slope of the Vosges. Along the foothills grapes grow to perfection and the region is one of the important wine-producing countries of Europe. "Lorraine differs from Alsace both in environment and type of population. In fact there is little to group these two areas for political administration save that together they almost completely fill the gap between Germany and France. Lorraine is a plateau, cooler than the lower Alsation plain and given over, so far as its agriculture is concerned, largely to pastures and cattle raising. The people, not so isolated from France as the Alsations, have somewhat closer affiliations with Latin culture.

"Industry has claimed considerable areas of both Alsace and Lorraine from their old paths of agriculture. Textile factories are concentrated chiefly in southern Alsace and in some of the Vosges valleys. The predominant industry in Lorraine is metallurgy. Near the Luxembourg frontier are coal deposits and beds of iron ore, the latter the largest in Europe. The coal is in the famous Saar basin. All about this region are concentrated populations of miners and metal workers. Alsace has no iron or coal, but near Mulhausen it possesses potash deposits exceeded in value only by those of northern Germany. These two deposits constitute practically the world supply of this indispensable fertilizer ingredient."

GAME WAS SCORELESS

Stites Builders, of Columbus, and Circleville Eagles Put Up Coates.

Best Game on Mason Lot This Season—
Washington C. H. Players Will Bring a Big Crowd of Rooters With Them Next Sunday.

Considering the weather and the attraction offered a pitifully small number saw the Eagle team battle the Stites Builders of Columbus to a scoreless tie Sunday afternoon.

From the spectator's standpoint the game was much the best that has been shown on Mason's field so far this season and all present were well satisfied with the class of entertainment offered.

Football followers are of the opinion that the Stites team is the most versatile organization met this season and they started the game with a rush which almost carried the Eagle team off their feet at the start. The locals finally braced on their own one yard line with their backs to the goal posts and stopped the visitors rush cold for two furious plunges. They kicked the ball to safety and for the remainder of the game the ball was fought back and forth, the most of the time near the center of the field.

The locals were handicapped by the absence of Mason from center, who was attending the C. A. C. rehearsal and by the injured condition of Griffith and Cheshire, who were both hurt in the game of last week. Griffith, who injured his foot in the first quarter of the previous game, attempted to go on the field and direct the team but was unable to carry the ball or take a chance on defense and retired in the second quarter Sunday. The big fullback showed the effect of a bad ankle secured in the former game and also played only a little over one quarter.

Weiler, the former high school star, took his position of first, playing both tackle and fullback in a very creditable manner. His line plunging occasioned much favorable comment. Parker was also in at half for his first game and is bound to prove a favorite. He is a cool, accurate person, a good runner and tackler and he is also an exceptional drop kicker. He attempted one Sunday from the fifty yard line but it was blocked.

Bell, the other new face at guard is already a fixture with the fans. He played a slap-bang game Sunday and is bound to be heard from. Scothorn could not be present Sunday but will be seen in other games. Carter played half for a portion of the game and made one very spectacular plunge thru the line for about 12 yards.

Neff, Palm, Anderson, Johnson, Rothman and the rest of the bunch played football like they knew how and the Eagle team will close the season with a live squad equal to any in central Ohio.

We play Washington C. H., next Sunday and they expect to bring a crowd of rooters along. The Eagle team is determined to win this game. Come out and assist them in putting over their first victory of the season. The Eagle lodge has gone to quite a lot of expense in putting the team on the field, confident that the people would support the right kind of a team. We have the team now and we will have good opponents for every game. Come out and show the boys that they were right when they thought you wanted high, clean sport.

Chance for Trade in Japan.

The native Japanese door slides on a rail or track, and is said to answer all purposes, but despite the fact that the scheme is perfectly satisfactory the importation of door hinges is increasing. The Japanese are very ready to adopt almost any of the methods or implements which come from the western world.

PASSING OF OLD SHIP END OF ERA

Last of Sailing Whalers "Piled Up" on Rocks.

New Bedford, Mass.—The Wanderer, last of New Bedford whalers, is through. She finished where she began, and today is pounding to pieces on the rocky ledges off Cuttyhunk. It marks the end of an era—the passing of an era of romance when "iron men went down to the sea in wooden ships"—the end of the era that gave New Bedford its "whaler's motto"—"A dead whale or a stove boat."

The Wanderer sailed on the cruise of 18 months, scheduled to be her last. The cruise lasted little more than a day, and the voyage off Cuttyhunk. For Captain Antone Edwards, the skipper, found he hadn't enough men, so the bark was anchored off Mishaum Point. During his absence the Wanderer began to drag anchor during what her crew of another generation would have called a mild breeze, drifted before a northerly gale and went on the rocks. And the Wanderer, half a century the proudest of New Bedford's fleet of imposing whalers, is breaking up on Middle Ground shoals, a total loss, ending her career, as the old plainsman—with her boots on.

Captain Edwards, who has been sailing on whalers for 32 years, reported the boat a total loss. Her foremast had dropped through her hull and she had buckled amidships.

While thousands of visitors thronged the deck of the Wanderer 48 hours before, sea-tanned whalers were overhauling her gear, grinding the whaling spades and fitting the try-out kettles just as they did a hundred years ago when whaling was in its heyday and New Bedford was the whaling port of North America.

The Wanderer is known to thousands through a popular moving-picture film, in which she was used in the whaling scenes. It was planned to put her back into the movies.

Built in 1848, bark-rigged and coppered, the Wanderer's bulwarks rose high over the deck, while her wheel was entirely covered by the high poop deck. The bulwarks were so high it was impossible to see to starboard.

Swedish Farms Lighted and Operated by Current

Stockholm.—While the utilization of water power for every purpose has been developing rapidly in Sweden during the last two decades, there is a strong tendency at present to convert the turbine power into electric energy for further industrial use. Thus factories are being built hundreds of miles away from the source of their power, and electric current is not only distributed to all parts of Sweden, but is exported to neighboring countries as well.

There are now 2,100 large power plants in Sweden, of which about 50 per cent furnish light, heat and power for the country districts. Besides, there are several hundred smaller plants using less than 10,000 horsepower each.

Forty per cent of the Swedish farms now run their household, dairy, and agricultural machinery by electricity, and 50 per cent of the houses in the country districts are lighted by electricity. This is believed to be a record for the world.

25,000 Farmers Unite to Pray Gods for Rain

Kioto, Japan.—More than 25,000 farmers participated in a prayer ceremony held recently in Funaoka, Kioto prefecture, to pray to the ancient Shinto deities to send rain. Drought has been threatening the western and southern part of Japan with serious rice crop shortages this year.

The drought is causing quarrels among farming communities in various parts of southern Japan, where the water supply is inadequate. The governor of Kumamoto prefecture has been asked to act as referee between two villages which are quarreling over the right of one higher up the stream that runs through both, to dam the stream to get water for its parched crops.

Boy Scouts Rescue Woman Lost 3 Days

Erwinna, Pa.—Boy Scouts from the summer camp at Treasure Island, in the Delaware, rescued an eighty-three-year-old woman who had been lost in the woods more than three days, about six miles from the camp, after suffering injury in a fall.

Mrs. Charles Moser left her farm near the camp to go berry picking. When she did not return, relatives and neighbors searched the woods but failed to find her.

Forty-one scouts and leaders volunteered for the work. They searched the woods near the Moser home five hours in small groups. Finally Philip Dalling, an Overbrook scout, found a blue apron and a few minutes later Thomas Mackay, a patrol leader of Olney, heard a faint cry and found the aged woman seated on the ground. She said she had hurt herself in a fall over a stone.

AMUSEMENTS

In his latest motion picture, "Triumph," coming to the Metropolitan theater Cecil B. DeMille, the most brilliant showman-producer in the whole screen world, returns to the type of modern society drama in which he scored his earlier and most decided successes. Film fans who recall with pleasure "Manslaughter," "Why Change Your Wife?" and "Male and Female," are assured that in "Triumph" Mr. DeMille offers them the same gripping, eye-filling combination of dazzling ladies and gowns, romance and thrill that made those pictures so popular.

"Triumph" is the story of a girl (Leatrice Joy) and two men who love her. The girl starts as a humble factory forelady and becomes a famous opera singer with two worlds at her feet. And yet wealth and fame are not enough until—

Fate tumbles one man (Rod LaRocque) from a millionaire's fortune to a park bench. Fate sweeps the other man (Victor Varconi) from overalls to a limousine and perfumed pajamas. And thru their vicissitudes of fortune, one thing remains constant—their love for the girl and the intense rivalry between them. Upon which lover does fate finally smile? And what of the girl?

"Triumph" was adapted by Jeanie Macpherson from the Saturday Evening Post serial and novel by Van Edginton, author of "Secrets." Besides Leatrice Joy, Rod LaRocque and Victor Varconi, the big cast includes Charles Ogle, Theodore Kosloff, Robert Edeson, Julia Faye, George Fawcett, Zasu Pitts and Raymond Hatton. It is a Paramount picture produced by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

SCHOOL GAMES

Washington Township Lost to Walnut—May Join Pumpkin Show Parade.

With a sixth of the school year past, the teachers are busy getting out their reports. The reports will be given to the parents Wednesday.

Walnut township cancelled the girls volley ball game Friday noon. The girls were very much disappointed. Walnut boys however gave the Washington boys a neat drubbing by a score of 16-7. Riegel, Walnut's left hander, held the Washington boys at his mercy until the last two innings, when they scored seven runs. Young and Glitt were wild and Walnut scored at will after the first inning. Washington was well pleased with the treatment received at Walnut and looks forward to pleasant relationship in athletics.

It was announced last Tuesday that school would not close for Friday of the Pumpkin Show. The board of education is reconsidering its action on the matter, and if a plan can be worked out, Washington township will co-operate with the other schools in a school parade.

The boys and girls will entertain the Pickaway township teams with games at home Friday afternoon. These games close the baseball and volley ball schedule. Basket ball games have already been scheduled, and practice will begin in the near future.

Graded Bible lessons will be given each Monday afternoon to the grade schools. Mrs. Young will have grades one and two; Rev. Hill Three, four and five; Rev. Weir, six, seven and eight. The final vote for Bible study in the schools stood 114 for Bible study and 2 against.

SOCIAL CALENDAR

Thursday afternoon at the County club in Chillicothe a most delightful bridge luncheon was in progress and was attended by a large number of the members, reservations having been made for thirteen tables. The club rooms were especially attractive with their decorations of fall flowers and a profusion of these lovely blossoms were used at this time. The delicious luncheon was served at one o'clock and at the conclusion of the pleasant hours of bridge which followed, Mrs. Elgar Barre of Circleville, received the prize for high score and Mrs. L. C. Anderson of Bainbridge the one for low score. Other out of town guests besides Mrs. Barre and Mrs. Anderson were Miss Ann Safford, of New York, Mrs. John, Arnold of Berkeley California, and Mrs. Harry H. Moore, of Cleveland. Mrs. John Blacker was the chairman of the committee in charge and her assistants were Mrs. Bert Hicks, Miss Olive Mace and Mrs. Carrie Lord.—News-Advertiser.

Mrs. W. J. Graham, Mrs. Harp VanRiper, Mrs. Mary Goff Morris, Mrs. Roy Davis and Misses Mary Wilder, Minnie Palm, Nellie Palm, and Charlotte McEwing of the Circleville Business and Professional Women's club attended a district meeting of the Ohio Federation of Business and Professional Women's clubs, held Sunday in Columbus at the Desher. At the close of the meeting there was a luncheon in the ball room, at which 79 were present representing clubs from all sections of the state.

NEIGHBORLY KINDNESS.

Forty-five men including the merchants of Kingston and community met at the home of Mrs. Arthur Minor Tuesday and cut her corn for her. Mrs. Minor buried her husband two weeks ago, and this act of kindness certainly shows the good spirit of the community. They put up over nine hundred shocks of corn.

MINSTRELSY ON TONIGHT

Everything in Readiness for the Raising of Curtain at the Grand.

Director Gano More Than Pleased With the Final Rehearsal Saturday—Only a Few Choice Seats Left—Will be Repeated Tomorrow Night.

Tonight is the big night at the Grand opera house, the night we have all been looking forward to with expectancy for several weeks past.

Tonight is the opening night of the C. A. C. minstrel show, and all of us who are fortunate enough to have seats for tonight's performance are waiting in anticipation for the raising of the curtain.

The final rehearsal of the show was put on Sunday afternoon by Director Gano, at the opera house and at the close of the afternoon's work Mr. Gano expressed himself as more than pleased with the rehearsal.

This show is really going to be exceptionally good for an amateur production and every person who attends will be in a position to congratulate himself for being among those present.

The singers are from among the best of Circleville's many fine vocalists. The end men are the pick of our fun makers, the dancers are all nimble footed exponents of the art of terpsichore.

Mr. Gano has furnished a magnificent set of costumes and several very pretty scenic effects are also carried by the director.

The musical numbers will be accompanied by a full orchestra selected from Circleville's well known instrumentalists and every little detail has been looked after to make the show as near perfect as is possible.

The show is now all ready for the rise of the curtain and we sincerely hope you will be there to witness it.

We wish this because we wish you to have the opportunity of enjoying this entertainment and we also hope that you will be there because we feel that the club is entitled to your support and cooperation and we feel that you should do justice to yourself and to your community in assisting the boys at this time.

There are still some very desirable seats left and if you have not yet purchased yours we urge you to do so at once as the receipts from the show mean a great deal to the boys who have had hard work to make ends meet the last couple of years.

TELLEZ NEW ENVOY

Diplomatic Relations Soon to Be Restored With Mexico.

Washington, Oct. 13.—Diplomatic relations between Mexico and the United States are soon to be restored after a lapse of four years. The new Mexican ambassador will be Manuel Tellez, the present charge d'affaires from Mexico City, who has played a prominent part in the restoration of cordial relations between his country and the United States. The last duly accredited ambassador from Mexico was Ignacio Bonillas, who went home in March, 1920. Since that time the Mexican government has left its interests in the hands of frequently shifting charges. Tellez will present his credentials, it is said, soon after the inauguration of President Calles.

SUCCESS HIS BECAUSE HE LOOKED FORWARD

Career of Newspaper Man Points a Moral.

By KEMAL STRAIGHT

On a lonely Kansas farm in the year 1869, a little boy was born. His early childhood was spent in the rugged environment of the then almost unbroken prairie.

Fortunately for him his parents moved to a camp in the Michigan lumber region.

Here the boy attended the primitive public school of the lumber camp. And it must have been at about this period that the youngster made his first forward look. He wanted to be a teacher.

When he finished at the local school, he went to the nearest normal institute and before he was twenty-one his dream had been realized.

This, however, was only the beginning. He saw that as a teacher of a single class, he could instruct but a few at a time.

Could he but talk to the little community in which he lived, how much more good he could do.

He looked forward again. He would study the people, find out what they most needed to know, and talk to them through a newspaper. He would become a reporter. That would be the first step.

His promotion was rapid—it could not have been otherwise—BECAUSE as he attained each position and worked hard to fill it, he looked forward to the next place ahead; and he kept his eyes clearly fixed until the step was taken.

He was still the teacher, the server of his fellow men. But he always pictured larger audiences and more people to listen to his teachings.

He became editor of a prominent Detroit newspaper.

In far New York, Joseph Pulitzer needed help. His newspaper was growing beyond its great chief's waning strength.

He needed a man big enough to wear his shoes when necessary.

He scanned the newspaper field.

Did he find the man he wanted among his well-trained subordinates?

Did he find him among the university graduates that crowded the ranks of newspaper men in the East?

NO. He found him in Frank I. Cobb, a man who had looked forward—a man who could build not only as well as he, but better—a man who had vision to "carry on."

Truly here were two great men. And they were great because they could see ahead of them, picture what they should be, what they should do.

Frank I. Cobb saw his vision materialize. He talked to millions; he taught them. He made the world better because he had lived in it. And so can we all.

Not That Kind

Eugene Foster, director of the Indianapolis Foundation, recently was sitting in his office at work. The door stood ajar and he noticed a stranger walk past scanning the painted words: "The Indianapolis Foundation," on the door.

The man walked in and as Foster rose to meet the stranger, was asked: "Say, how are you fixed for cement?"

"How am I fixed for what?" Foster asked.

"For cement," the man replied. "Aren't you in the foundation business?"

"Yes, I'm in the foundation business, but this foundation business does not use cement," replied Foster. —Indianapolis News.

Data in Corner Stone

When the corner stone of a new hospital now being erected in New York has been set in place, a complete record of modern medicine will be placed in the block for posterity. Molded in the block will be a reel of motion picture film showing doctors performing operations of this period. There will also be a complete set of glass-stained specimens of all known disease-producing bacteria, and ready for scrutiny under the microscope 100 years from now; a collection of drugs regarded as specific cures for diseases and a record of those diseases now regarded as incurable.

The Chief's Prediction

A peppy young messenger boy walked briskly into the captain's office at police headquarters several days ago with a telegram in his hand. Not deigning to glance at the outstretched hand of the captain, he walked over to Herman Rikhoff, chief of police, and—Wham!—slapped him on the back with all the strength he could muster.

"Hi!" he said, a broad Irish grin breaking over his face.

Rikhoff looked him up and down for a few moments.

"Well, boy," he said, "there's one thing—you'll get along in the world all right." —Indianapolis News.

Superstitious Darkies

Among southern negroes the list of domestic signs, omens and superstitions are legion. If a cow stops in front of a cabin and bellows it is taken as a warning of death to some inmate. If it bellows twice the party marked for dissolution will die within two days.

When a rooster enters the house and crows it's a sign of visitors. If it crows just outside the door it indicates that the residents will be

Work of Eradication Going on Quite Satisfactorily.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The work of eradicating tuberculosis from the cattle herds of the country has been going forward so satisfactorily in recent years that it is predicted by those in charge of the work of the United States Department of Agriculture that within eight years it is probable that as many as 30 states may be free of the plague. This will permit of the consolidation of the veterinary forces so that work may be carried on more rapidly in the remaining states where the extent of infection is greater. The systematic plan of eradication has been going on in earnest since 1917.

According to figures compiled from reports received by the department from field forces in the various states, about 8 1/2 per cent of the cattle in the country are tuberculous. In many of the states, of course, the infection is much more extensive.

The progress made in the work during the fiscal year terminating June 30, 1924, was greater than in any previous year. The accredited herds increased from 28,526 to 48,273. A better indication of progress, however, was the extension of the plan whereby areas, such as counties, have been cleaned up in one whirlwind campaign. In the past year the number of counties adopting this plan increased from 208 to 317.

During the fiscal year 1924 more than 5,000,000 cattle were tested. The prospects are, from present indications, that this record will be exceeded by more than a million during the current fiscal year.

Improvement in Quality

Assists Value of Lambs

Most of the sheep in South Carolina show a decided lack of breeding and care, which means that in order to put a first-class product on the market some improvements must be made. These improvements require very little expense and labor, advises E. G. Godbey, associate animal husbandman, in making suggestions along this line.

The use of pure bred rams will make more improvement in the appearance of the flocks than any other one thing. These rams can be put on the farm at from $30 to $50 per head. At the present time, a great number of scrub rams run with the ewes for the entire year. These rams have very poor nutrition conformation and a light wool covering, and in many cases they are closely related to some of the ewes. This haphazard method of breeding has resulted in sheep that are long legged and narrow bodied. Their wool is also short, coarse, and open, which makes a poor quality product for the market. One cross with a pure bred ram will make a marked change in the appearance and weight of the lambs. Save the ewe lambs and breed them after they are a year old. Buy a new ram or trade with a neighbor.

Plain System of Poultry

Accounts Is Important

A definite record of expenditures and receipts is one of the greatest needs of many poultry keepers. Without it, the poultryman is hardly able to determine the extent of success or failure of his work.

In Farmers' Bulletin 1427, just issued, the United States Department of Agriculture gives a simple system of poultry accounts by which the necessary records can be easily kept. This system may be used either by the poultry keeper who has a small flock or by the commercial poultryman.

A study of his records kept according to this system will enable the poultryman to determine which parts of the operation of the farm are profitable and where the costs are too much. The actual equipment necessary and the amount of feed required for the operation of a commercial poultry farm are also given.

Copies of Farmers' Bulletin 1427, Poultry Accounts, may be had free of charge upon application to the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Farm Hints

Continue to cull your poultry flock.

Only good farm land can produce good income.

Clean up and burn all dead and decaying plants.

Keep all vegetables gathered to encourage fruiting.

Farming without legumes is like writing checks without making deposits.

Pick out the live stock which is to be shown at the fair and give it plenty of attention.

Farm surveys show that our farm life is still too largely one of drudgery for men and women.

Our future lack of timber will not be due to lack of timber land, but to the lack of timber sense.

In spite of the slur, "as dirty as a pig," hogs need and like sanitary quarters and pay good dividends on the cost of such quarters.

He Kept His Date

A college student was nearly dressed for a date recently when he discovered a rip in his Sunday and only presentable trousers. He spread them on his lap and sewed the rip, but sewed them to his shirt tail and didn't know it. When he went to put them on he ripped all the buttons off his only clean shirt. He sewed thirty minutes more before he could leave his room fully dressed.—Emporia Gazette.

"Poker" Expression

The term "stand-patter" is a political slang expression and was originated by Senator Hanna in 1902 to indicate the attitude of the leaders of the Republican party on the tariff question. It came from "stand pat," a poker term, which expresses the intention of a player to play the cards originally dealt him without helping his hand by drawing cards.

Explaining Preaching

The object of preaching is constantly to remind mankind of what they are constantly forgetting; not to supply the defects of human intelligence, but to fortify the feebleness of human resolutions; to recall mankind from the by-path where they turn into that broad path of salvation which all know, but few tread.—Sidney Smith.

Danger in Saccharine

Saccharine is an intensely sweet substance commercially about 300 times as sweet as cane sugar. It is used in preserves and in foods especially adapted to persons suffering from diabetes; but for normal individuals the substitution is undesirable, and in some countries the free use of saccharine is prohibited by statute.

Expression Has Altered

The true phrase "to the bitter end" was "better end," and was used to indicate a crisis or moment of extremity. When in a storm an anchored vessel had paid out all of her cable, the rope ran out to the better end—that is, to the end that was in better condition because seldom used.

Sister Edith's Superiority

By DOROTHY BROMLEY

(Copyright.)

EDITH DALY, whose only rival for the title of head of the family was her twin brother, Jim, had often been amused by the prattle of fraternity initiates on the downtown streets of Boston, but she had never dreamed that one of them would secure for her that position in her home, then lose it for her again.

True, her mother was the real director of the family affairs. Father had died some years before she and Jim cast their first ballots. Since then Jim had maintained that he was the boss, so to speak.

Edith maintained Jim's ideas on these subjects were perverted. But recently all he could be interested in was radio. That heterogeneous piece of apparatus which had functioned occasionally, was now beginning to accumulate its first coating of dust and was actually falling into disuse. Jim's mind had gone flying, literally and figuratively. That is to say, Jim had become interested in what was becoming a familiar sight—airplanes. He was always ready to deliver a lengthy and technical discourse on their nature, with a gusto as much as to say: "See how much I know of them, while you know nothing." Edith's only successful retort was, "How do you know? You never flew in one." So the rivalry continued.

Fall came and with it fraternity initiations. Late one October afternoon Edith stood on a corner waiting for a car home, when down the street solemnly marched a motley crew of initiates exhibiting their follies to all in the vicinity. The leader halted his band not ten paces from where Edith stood, as interested as any.

"Dropsy," bawled the leader, "do your stuff."

Much to her surprise and embarrassment, one of the young men, bedecked in what might once have been the garb of a Continental, approached Edith, doffed his hat, dropped on one knee, and cried pleadingly, as she backed away under the eyes of a score of strangers, "Oh, fair lady, I am but a poor humble soul, sick unto death. Deny me not the honor of your company for a scant few hours this week, sometime, anytime. Fair lady, grant me a date!" He paused. Edith heard a man standing near say:

"That's his orders, to make a date in public so we'll all know what kind of girl he likes."

Edith immediately felt rage toward the speaker and sympathy toward the poor initiate. She turned toward him again.

"Sweet one," he was beseeching her, "spare me but a moment of your time. Grant me but a few hours of your company and I will take thee whithersoever thou desirest, to the ends of the earth, sea, or sky. This I mean in all earnestness."

For some reason Edith thought of Jim's airplanes. She had been hearing so much about the sky recently, this sounded familiar.

"What?" she gasped.

"True; all true, lady," replied the extemporaneous Romeo; "whither wouldst thou go? Wouldst fly with me?"

"Yes," she told him, hardly knowing she was speaking, while the crowd chuckled at the scene.

"Then tomorrow, lady, Saturday, I will meet you at two—I will come for you—where?"

Through the corner of her eye, Edith saw her car. She named her address and ran, lest the conductor failed to wait for her. All the way home she thought—What if he didn't come for her? Would he really take her? Did she truly want to go? What would Jim say? If she could fly just once she could no doubt quiet pestiferous babble on his latest hobby.

In the evening she made bold and had a good time "kidding" him that she would fly before he did, that she knew more, comparatively, than he did, because he had never flown, knew only what he had read, while she was to fly. Jim laughed and didn't believe her.

But despite Edith's fears and Jim's disbelief, there called on time the next afternoon a gentleman who asked for Miss Daly (he got this out of the directory), and who, when ushered in by their mother, proved to be the suitor of the afternoon before. When Edith appeared he apologized for his former actions, while her heart sank. Wouldn't she go? Then he continued: "But I meant what I said. I have a plane at the air port, and if Miss Daly will go I'll be glad to take her this afternoon."

"But is it safe?" cut in Mrs. Daly. "Of course, mother," cried Edith. Jim says so."

A moment later the aviator and Edith left the house together and Mrs. Daly saw a group of fraternity brothers follow them down the street.

"Confound it!" said Jim, when he came home and heard the story from his mother. Then "Good!" when she also said that a wink she had given Edith when they left meant that she might invite her company home for supper.

Edith did bring company for supper, and he came for more than one supper, too.

"Just remember," she found occasion to tell Jim, "that just because you are a man doesn't mean that you have any more intelligence or ability than a woman, and especially than your sister."

Children of Great Men.

Shakespeare had children from whom the world never heard. So it was with Dickens. None of his children came anywhere near his standard. Owen Meredith was a mediocre writer as compared with his father, Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton. Lytton, while a very voluminous writer, was also strong and fine at all times. Alexander Dumas fils could not at any time compare with Dumas the elder. Nathaniel Hawthorne was head and shoulders above his son, Julian, in the power to produce books worth while.

Community Vats to Solve Dip Problem

Control Animal Parasites Which Cause Heavy Loss.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Community dipping vats in Platte county, Wyo., are solving the problem of controlling the animal parasites which have caused heavy loss to live stock growers there for some years. Through the efforts of the county agricultural extension agent sufficient interest was aroused in the eradication of mange and lice, to make it possible to organize community live stock dipping associations, the members paying an equal sum into the treasury for materials and doing the work of constructing and dipping plants themselves. Six plants were finished or under construction by the end of 1922 and last year the number was brought up to 14. Two of these are for sheep only. The average cost of the plants was $450 each and from three to four weeks was required to complete one. Each includes a concrete vat reinforced with steel with a filling and draining system, a heating system, double drain pens, chutes and corrals. The vats have an average capacity of 3,000 gallons and the corrals will accommodate from 1,000 to 5,000 head of stock.

The first year 10,000 head of cattle—70 per cent of them infected with lice—and 1,800 head of sheep were dipped. Twenty-five thousand head of cattle, according to reports of the United States Department of Agriculture, went through the vats in 1923, no record being kept of sheep, hogs and horses. All dipping is done under state inspection. Cattle growers estimate they have saved at least $3 on every head of stock dipped, through the saving in feed, increased growth, and improved marketable condition.

How to Prevent Goiter in All Young Animals

Enlargement of the thyroid gland of the calf, commonly termed goiter, may be prevented by giving the pregnant cow five grains of iodide of potash on alternate days for sixty days before calving. It may be dissolved in her drinking water.

Where drinking cups are used in the stable, a five-grain tablet of the drug may be dissolved in the water in each cup every other day. Another plan is to dissolve one ounce of iodide of potash in one gallon of water and of that solution give the cow one tablespoonful, containing approximately two grains of the drug, once daily in water.

That amount is also the correct dose to give to a pregnant mare, sow or ewe to accomplish the same purpose. Doing so will also prevent hairlessness in new-born pigs, provided the sow, throughout pregnancy, is made to take active exercise daily and is fed a balanced ration of mixed feed and allowed access to minerals such as salt, air-slaked lime, or ground limestone and woodashes or steamed bonemeal. An affected calf has been successfully treated by giving it two grains of iodide of potash once daily in water and painting the lump with tincture of iodine two or three times a week, after clipping off the hair on the affected part.

White Holland Turkeys

The smallest of the breeds of turkeys is the White Holland, which is growing in popularity.

The White Holland, as its name implies, is white. It is a very attractive bird; stands confinement better than the Bronze and is said to be a better layer under ordinary conditions.

The standard weight of the White Holland tom is 26 pounds, though many weigh more. Sixteen pounds is the standard weight for the hen.

FARM NOTES

Egg-laying contests stimulate interest in egg production.

Young chickens need plenty of ventilation and clean water.

The only advantage of a scrub cow is that it doesn't take so long to milk her.

Careful dairymen have found that warm and cold cream never mix satisfactorily.

When the milk scales come into the milk house, boarder cows go out of the barn door.

Buy a purebred bull early in the fall so that you may breed your cows during November, December and January.

A farmer who doesn't keep good family dairy cows should consult an alienist to find out what is wrong with himself.

Special attention is now being given to the vitamin content of eggs and their fertility and hatchability as affected by rations.

Do everything you can to make your hens comfortable. If their health and vitality are kept at the highest level, it will add many eggs to your basket.

If your hens are worried by lice and mites, then they cannot lay the maximum number of eggs. An ounce of prevention just now is worth a pound of cure later on.

FIJIANS ALSO HAVE THEIR BLUE LAWS

Aid Religion by Charging Tourists for Dances.

Levuka, Fiji Islands.—The natives of Fiji have their Sunday blue laws, and keep them, too.

The drinking places are closed tight on Sunday.

The streets are deserted while everybody attends religious services for several hours, pausing only for lunch.

The meke-meke, or native dance, is no longer given publicly. With such reverence do these South Sea Islanders hold their religious teachings and worship that they are induced only with great difficulty to give an exhibition of former barbaric rites and ceremonies before tourists. The meke-meke has been commercialized; no longer is it given gratuitously, but tourists must pay from $50 to $100 for each dance. All the proceeds go to the church.

When 60 Americans who were touring the South seas recently came ashore to be entertained by the native dancers, they found the village streets deserted. Nowhere, not even beneath the coconut trees, was a Fijian to be seen. Several of the more timid women in the party voiced their fear that the natives were hiding and about to rush upon them and kill them all.

Finally a broad-shouldered native was seen. One of the Americans asked him where his chief and people were.

"I understand you perfectly, sir," he replied in good English. "It has been many years since Fiji was ruled by a chief. Fiji is a British colony, sir."

"The people are attending religious services," he replied, to the manager's question about the absence of the people.

Two hours later the sandy streets of the village were crowded with natives returning from church for lunch. They took little notice of the tourists, and at 3 o'clock returned for religious services. When asked to give a meke-meke, the answer to all entreaties was simply:

"The Sabbath is for worship and rest, not for pleasure."

Although only 40 years ago Cakabau, the great cannibal king, reigned, and the killing and eating of human beings was then a common practice, 95 per cent of the 88,000 native inhabitants of the Fiji Islands are Christians today, according to missionary workers.

American Slang Now Is Common in China

Wuchang, China.—A nation-wide athletic meet has just been held here which had all the characteristics of a similar meet in any college town in America. The manner in which the athletes went at their jobs and the comments on their performances were essentially American.

Cries of "Come on, boys; you can beat him!" "Shoot, shoot!" "Stick to it, kid; wipe the butter off your fingers," and others of a similar nature were frequently heard from the spectators' benches and from the rosters on the side lines. Real sportsmanship was in evidence for the most part, and there was little or no playing that was unnecessarily rough.

There were baseball, soccer, volleyball, tennis and basketball, in addition to the field sports, and a detachment of boy scouts, who had their own encampment and lived in tents during the three days of the meet.

The girls' basketball and volleyball games, being a direct innovation in north China, attracted many spectators and elicited much favorable comment.

It was estimated more than 15,000 persons were present.

Half-Pound Diamond Is Found in Arkansas

Little Rock, Ark.—A blue-white diamond weighing more than half a pound and measuring two inches long, an inch wide and a quarter of an inch thick, is the latest find in a Pike county mine. Its weight is 40 1/2 carats. No estimate of the value of the stone was given, but the largest diamond previously taken from the mine, weighing 20 carats, sold for $2,500.

Planes to Guard Britain

London.—Great Britain's coast line will in the near future be patrolled and guarded by powerful seaplanes, now under construction for the navy. Each will carry a pilot, navigator, two machine gunners and a torpedo for launching at hostile surface craft. Still more powerful planes are being built to make longer flights seaward and these will carry five men each.

8,582 Killed in Year at Grade Crossings

New York.—That 8,582 persons were killed at railroad grade crossings during 1923, an increase of 20 per cent over 1922, is the official announcement of the United States bureau of public roads.

The bureau insists on elimination of grade crossings on federal aid projects wherever practicable.

Many dangerous crossings have already been eliminated with the co-operation of state highway departments through the construction of steel or concrete overhead crossings or underpasses and by relocating the highway to avoid crossing and recrossing railroad tracks, the report states.

The AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

FLORIDA CHOOSES MORRIS COMMANDER

James Ward Morris, Jr., is the new commander of the Florida department of the American Legion. Florida is regarded as one of the outstanding departments in the Legion, as a result of its membership activities and of its program of civic endeavor. To Florida went the honor of leading the Legion in the parade at the recent national convention in St. Paul. This honor is awarded to the department attaining the highest percentage of its membership of the preceding year.

Entering the first officers' training camp at Fort McPherson, Ga., on May

James Ward Morris, Jr.

15, 1917, Mr. Morris won a first lieutenant's commission. He was with the Three Hundred and Twenty-sixth Infantry of the Eighty-second division at Camp Gordon, Ga., from the organization of the division. He went overseas with that unit in April, 1918.

Promoted to captain, he was assigned as regimental adjutant of the Three Hundred and Twenty-sixth Infantry. He was in the Toul and Marbach sectors. He took part in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives. He was captain of his company and then operations officer of his regiment until its demobilization. After his discharge, he received a certificate of citation from General Pershing for meritorious service.

After training at Staunton Military academy and Horner Military school, Mr. Morris graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1912. He completed his law course in 1913 and began the practice at Tampa in June of that year. He was born at Smithfield, N. C., on November 14, 1890.

Col. Cephas C. Bateman Becomes Legion Member

The San Diego (Cal.) post of the American Legion is proud of the distinction that has recently come to it in the enrollment as a member of Col. Cephas C. Bateman, chaplain, U. S. A., retired, and the oldest member in point of unbroken service as chaplain in the United States army.

Colonel Bateman was born in Michigan in 1857, came to the Pacific coast in 1871 and was educated and ordained as a clergyman in California. He was appointed chaplain in the regular army by President Benjamin Harrison in 1890 with the rank of captain, and was made a delegate to the World's Congress of Religions at the Columbian exposition in 1893. He served with Shafter at Santiago in 1898. He also served twice in the Philippines, more than a year with troops in expeditions directed against the Moros. At the outbreak of the World war, Chaplain Bateman was active in the united war work drive and was later organizer and first director of the chaplain's school of the army now situated at Fort Leavenworth, retiring in 1921 on account of age.

After a lifetime of travel in service to his God, country and flag, Colonel Bateman has selected San Diego as his home and the American Legion is proud of him and his splendid record. A loyal, active Legionnaire, Colonel Bateman has taken a keen interest in the work of the local post and finds himself thoroughly in sympathy with the aims and objects of the ex-service men.

Will Hold Big Celebration

Twenty-two posts of the American Legion in Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, will unite on November 11 in a gigantic celebration of Armistice day. On the afternoon of Armistice day the Legionnaires of the county will gather at Public Square park, where they will be addressed by two men prominent in the affairs of the nation, one of whom will be Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis. The second speaker has not been named.

The Name on the Card

By ELAINE LE CLAIR

(Copyright.)

"ARIADNE DRASCOVIA," the little card read.

Becker looked at it for a moment and then stuffed it into his pocket.

"Queer, the way a woman can't hold on to a thing," he mused as he plunged into the traffic at Twenty-third and West streets.

If even for one day he picked up all the handkerchiefs, cards and gloves that women—still, they didn't all have names like that. She probably had a right to drop her card. Perhaps she was an actress or an—

But James Becker was not a romantic; he was a successful business man of thirty-eight, with a wife and two daughters. He did not continue his day-dreaming, immediately.

He dodged around an oil truck and reached the opposite corner just as an oblong of white pasteboard fluttered to the sidewalk. Becker, being a gentleman, stooped to pick the card with out first looking to see whether the woman was young and beautiful. He extended it between his neatly gloved second and third fingers. He was about to raise his hat.

"Excuse me," he began.

But where was she? He had noticed a gray squirrel coat. Ah, there it was, being ushered into Gleason's through the big revolving door. Well, it probably didn't matter. He glanced at the card: "Ariadne Drascoviac."

Instinctively Becker entered Gleason's. There was no gray squirrel coat in sight. Aimlessly he wandered towards the leather goods counter.

Ah, that was a pretty trifle! He peered more closely at a gray vanity case, hexagon in shape, with gold fittings.

"A woman who carried a bag like that couldn't lose her cards," he reflected.

"Only $8.50," pleaded the clerk. "Just the thing for someone who has a gray costume."

"I'll take it," said Becker briefly, although he knew perfectly well that his wife's coat was brown.

With the vanity box under his arm he strolled out into the sunlight. It was just 4 o'clock. He could catch the 4:18 if he hurried.

But suppose he did go home? In all probability Clara would be at her club, and since this was Friday, the girls would be at dancing class. They'd all come piling in and rage while they ate underdone chops and blue-balled potatoes.

If Clara don't find a new maid soon—

Still, he might as well. It was growing cold now that the sun was going down. If he and Cheney put across the business deal that they had discussed at luncheon, he'd buy Clara a new fur coat—gray squirrel—possibly.

Now and again on his way to the station, Becker glanced down at the sidewalk, but his search was not rewarded. The train was crowded with women and girls who wore coats of racoon, possum and muskrat, but not squirrel. Becker scanned them, and then spread out his paper and read until the conductor called out something which sounded like "See-nah Hill," but wasn't.

With vanity box and evening paper tucked under his arm, Becker strode along the station platform and out into the street. Just then a rush of wind flicked something by the bottom of his overcoat. Dropping package and paper, he snatched at it.

Yes, it was the same name; and, yet, how could it be, here in this place?

The electric lights were still dim against the sunset and, in spite of the cold, Becker thought that he caught a faint whiff of that dampness so peculiar to an early spring dusk. Perhaps it was this thought which caused him to pass his own brass-knocked door.

After three trips around the square, fully convinced that there were no more cards to be found, he let himself in with his latch-key.

Sounds of rattling tins came from the rear of the house. In the hallway leading to the kitchen he met his wife.

"Oh, don't come out here, Jim, dear," she exclaimed. "She came on the 4:05. Wouldn't it have been funny if you had come out together?"

"Who?"

"The new maid, of course."

"Did she wear that?" He pointed dramatically to the coat hooks in the corner.

"What? That fur coat?" And she laughed. "Don't get excited. It's falling to pieces—and it's imitation, at that. And, oh, Jim, dear, it's the funniest thing. She's dumb, and she carries cards, and you couldn't possibly guess her name."

Becker thought that he could, but somehow he didn't care. He let her tell him.

"Ariadne Drascoviac!"

With Thanks

Laboring mightily, a little lad was pushing a handcart loaded with broken stone, and ten times too big for him. A kindly passer-by put his shoulder to the wheel and helped him. When they arrived at the top of the hill, he said to the boy, in front of the crowd of idlers that had collected:

"I call it an outrage to give a kid like you a job like that! Why didn't you tell your employer it was too heavy for you?"

"I did."

"And what did the big bully say?"

"Well, he said, 'Go ahead with it—our sure to find some fool loiterer the way to give you a hand.'"

Ammonia.
Ammonia is found in minute quantity in air, and is a natural product of the decay of animal substances. It is procured artificially by the destructive distillation of nitrogen organic matters, such as bones, hair, horns and hoofs, and is largely obtained as a by-product in the manufacture of illuminating gas from coal.

BIG PEAT BED IS UNCOVERED BY SEA

Find Expected to Cut Cape Cod Fuel Bills.

Boston.—Cape Cod folks have solved the fuel problem for "a hard winter." If successful, the coal barons and middlemen, who have been receiving $20 the ton for the poor quality of coal, will get a jolt likely to be long remembered.

In a word, Cape Codders are to return to the peat-burning days of their forefathers, utilizing a recently discovered peat deposit, estimated to yield 50,000 tons, uncovered by the sea surf on Nauset beach in Eastham.

The peat deposit is the greatest natural wonder on Cape Cod. The peat bed is within 300 feet of the ocean, separated at low tide by the white, sandy beach and frequently lashed by breakers. The deposit has been completely covered for 250 years or more by 30 feet of white beach sand.

Gunsold, who visited these shores long before the pilgrims left a map of Cape Cod which shows that at Eastham and also at Chatham long points of land containing hundreds of acres extended miles into the Atlantic. The Eastham point was named Point Car and the other Point Gilbert. They entirely disappeared years ago. To this day, however, vessels and fishermen have fouled anchors and lines on roots of trees, pieces of which have been brought to the surface, these roots giving positive evidence that land once extended from Chatham to George's banks, 70 miles east-southeast from Chatham Light.

Capt. Abbott Walker, veteran of coast guard station No. 39, says he first observed evidence of a peat deposit near that point ten years ago. In that short interval the sea has advanced inland many feet.

The great deposit, which crops out at the foot of the bluff, extends some distance underground, and probably runs back under the coast guard station 500 feet. Inland, beyond the station, is a large swamp, which is about on a level with the peat bed and may form a part of it.

A portion 50 feet wide facing the sea and 40 feet in depth to the bluff behind it has been uncovered by the surf.

In appearance the peat is a rich dark brown of a purely vegetable matter such as decayed leaves and sticks. It crumbles easily, burns freely when dry, but holds fire well and gives off a great heat. The smoke has the pleasant odor of burning cedar.

Carry Death Notice Through Town on Salver

Tallahassee, Fla.—Funeral announcement on a silver salver, borne through the streets by an aged negro, is an old Spanish custom which exists today in Tallahassee, and nowhere else in the United States, according to the historical committee of the Florida centennial celebration.

"This means of announcing the death of a member of a leading family long antedated the newspapers," points out Col. Fred T. Myers, Tallahassee attorney, whose family has resided here continuously for more than a century. "It was common in the days when the flag of Spain waved over Florida, and has persisted in the face of modern means of communication."

A carefully engrossed announcement of the place and date of funeral and burial is attached to a broad silver tray by bands of black silk ribbon. A dignified negro then bears it through the business section. He presents it ceremoniously to all who care to read.

Stingless Bee in Niche Beside Spineless Cactus

New York.—The novelty having worn off the "spineless cactus" and various other concoctions made to order by the incomparable Luther Burbank, allow us to present the latest innovation, the "stingless bee," discovered by Dr. Frank E. Lutz of the American Museum of Natural History.

Doctor Lutz, who recently returned from the wilds of Panama, has startled the scientific world with the "red-bellied trigona," as it has been christened. "Harmless as a butterfly," Doctor Lutz claims for his find.

Bones of Elotherium, Tertiary Beast, Found

Portland, Ore.—Fossils of another strange animal which used to roam the wilds of eastern Oregon years ago have been discovered. A group of University of California geologists have found the skull, tooth and several bones of an elotherium, a squat, piglike creature which probably existed in the tertiary age. The skull was about the size of that of a horse, except that it was flatter. One of the teeth was about two inches in diameter and about three inches long.

Nero's 6-Story Bath Found Near Naples

Milan, Italy.—Nero's pompous bathing house, the largest of the Roman period yet discovered, has been excavated at Agnano, near Naples. The structure is six stories high and 1,125 feet long. The three topmost galleries were reserved for individual steam baths.

MARRIAGE CEREMONY

Miss Emily Comstock Lewis Becomes Bride of Henry C. McMordie.

Two Hundred Guests Witness Solemn Rite Performed by Rev. Robert Lee Baird in St. Philip's Episcopal Church—Will Live in Detroit, Mich.

Miss Emily Comstock Lewis, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Southard Lewis, was married to Mr. Henry Campbell McMordie, of Windsor, Ontario, son of Mrs. Robert McMordie, London, Ontario, Saturday evening October 11, at 6:30 in St. Philip's church. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Robert Lee Baird in the presence of about two hundred guests. The chancel was decorated with palms, ferns and chrysanthemums, with here and there a branch covered with bright red leaves, which brought a touch of the glorious coloring of the perfect autumn day into the sacred place.

Mr. Lewis gave his daughter in marriage. Mr. McMordie chose for his best man, Mr. Brooke Baxter, Windsor, Ontario; the matron of honor, the bride's only attendant, was Mrs. Samuel M. Sproat, Cortola, California. The bride's dress was ivory satin and silver cloth. She wore her mother's veil. It was caught by a cornet of orange blossoms, the rose point lace that had belonged to her grandmother, for whom she was named, and in her charming reserve, which is one of her outstanding characteristics. Miss Lewis made a most beautiful bride. Her shower bouquet was made of roses, lavender orchids and swansonia.

The matron of honor's dress was apricot georgette with brown lace hat and shoes of the same color. She carried baby chrysanthemums in an arm bouquet.

The ushers were Messrs. Harry Heffner, Harry Moeller, Adrian Yates, and Clark Will. It was a very handsomely appointed wedding and the reception that followed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lewis was a brilliant affair. Autumn flowers adorned the house. Receiving with Mrs. Lewis were her sister, Mrs. Frederic Beckwith Stevens, Mrs. Lewis Haight Kirby, Miss Martha Lewis and Mrs. Metcalf. Mrs. Lewis wore a deep rose georgette with steel trimmings, and carried Aaron Ward roses and lilies of the valley; Mrs. Stevens, taupe brocaded chiffon velvet; Mrs. Kirby king's blue velvet and silver lace with a silver fillet; Miss Martha Lewis, beaded pink georgette, and Mrs. Metcalf, black georgette with iridescent beads. The bride's table had a big centerpiece of the season's flowers. An orchestra stationed in the hall played while the bridal party at the table made merry over the reading of telegrams, received by the happy pair and the response to toasts. The many presents were beautiful.

Those from a distance were; Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Beckwith Stevens, Detroit; Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Haight Kirby, Kalamazoo, Michigan; Mrs. Samuel M. Sproat, Portola, California; Mr. Brooke Baxter, Windsor, Ontario; Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin H. Scranton, Hartsdale, New York; Miss Eliza Jane Beattie, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Miss Martha Lewis, Mrs. Metcalf, Mr. and Mrs. Valle, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Story, Mrs. F. K. Day, Mrs. Elon Hale, Mrs. Loy Hoyt, Chillicothe; Misses Sallie and Alice Prouty, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Throop, Mrs. Richard Weldon, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Fleming, Columbus. The bride is one of Circleville's most accomplished young ladies; the groom is a structural engineer and as such served four years and ten months overseas. He was in all the major battles; Ypres, LaSomme, Vinny Ridge, Amiens and in the latter won a military cross. He served as major and was two years and nine months on the front line. He is now in command of a divisional engineer corps at Windsor, Ontario.

Mr. and Mrs. McMordie left for their new home amidst a shower of rose leaves and rice. Many good wishes follow them. They will be at home after November 15, at 2940 Chicago Boulevard, Detroit, Michigan.

Are Your Children Bored?

The children of the house should not be allowed to monopolize a guest's attention. Mothers are usually blind to their children's faults, as less loving eyes see them, and they fail to understand that a guest's apparent delight in playing with the youngsters is often no more than politeness, and in reality he is bored and very tired of "playing bear," telling fairy stories and examining favorite toys and books.

Electric Currents

Electric currents may be induced by applying mechanical pressure to gelatinous surfaces and this "mechanoelectric" effect is supposed to be of great importance in explaining many electric effects in living organisms.
